John:

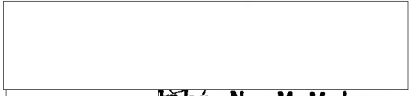

By now the mantle of your new office is well situated on your shoulders and I'm sure the Army will prosper under your leadership. I do want to take the time, albeit belatedly, to congratulate you on your assignment and to extend the invitation to call upon the Intelligence Community and the Agency for any intelligence support you may need.

Your familiarization with CIA will undoubtedly afford you the opportunity to push the right button or call the right number, but if there is anything you do need I will be more than happy to ensure that we are responsive to you.

The Director has made a concerted effort to get intelligence support to the various commanders around the world. We are equally as anxious to make sure we satisfy the customers here in Washington.

With every best wish for continued success.

Regards,

 John N. McMahon
